

World NCD Congress 2023 Training Workshop

Dates: June 25th (afternoon) and June 26th (morning), 2023

Theme:

Equitable Health Research Training for All

Objectives:

- Provide a global perspective to key core competencies needed for success in health research locally, nationally and internationally.
- Develop professional skills in grant writing, implementation science, community engagement and science communication.
- Facilitate an opportunity for engagement, connection and networking with peers, people with lived experience and mentors.

Description:

The goal of the workshop is to provide participants with hands-on learning opportunities and fundamental knowledge of core competency skill sets needed for success in health research. Through interactive workshop sessions, participants will gain knowledge and skills in grant writing, implementation science, community engagement and science communication. Participants will also have opportunities to engage, network and connect with peers, people with lived and living experience, and mentors from across the globe. By attending the workshop, participants will leave with tangible skills as they prepare for success in academic and nonacademic career settings. Overall, the workshop seeks to provide equitable health research training for all and to strengthen the health research workforce locally, nationally and internationally.
